In this award-winning game, Arthur and his friends and family work together to address environmental issues that threaten their hometown of Elwood City. From littered beaches to endangered tree frogs, from deforested parks to wasted water, the team has a big task to tackle and YOU can help! Choose a character and collect colored resource cards representing time, expertise, friends, effort and advice. Use these resources to solve the challenges and, in return, receive tree seeds to help restore Elwood City to its natural beauty! Underscoring the spirit of “green” and saving trees, the paper products used in this game are made from recycled material.

Arthur™ Saves the Planet comes with two sets of rules, one for older children and one for children ages 4 – 7 (no reading required). A cooperative variant of the game play is also included.

This game is being used successfully in classrooms to spur discussions about environmental issues. It has also been played by groups of parents and children during PBS’s Kids and Family Club events.
